"Co-lum-bia!" College Boys on the Campus Making Demand for Return of Prof. Beard

COLUMBIA STUDENTS SOCIAL PAPER ASSN.

at 11 o'clock Monday for holding and... making no definite action. The one or two undergraduates who were able to make themselves heard asserted that the gathering was not called by Columbia men, but had been arranged by persons outside the university.

Jack Hyde, sophomore athlete and captain of last year's swimming team, fought his way to the balcony and yelled:

"This whole affair is a red herring. The fellows back of it are not Columbia students. It does not reflect the Columbia spirit, and any demonstration of this kind is not good for the college."

These disturbances have been started by people not connected with the university," said Percival H. Weiner. "The question of free speech is not involved. Some of us may want to protest against the action of the trustees, but if we do, let us draw up a dignified protest, urging that Professors Cattell and Davis be asked to return, and that Professor Beard be asked to withdraw his resignation."

The only other speaker was William Durant, who began by asking that he be not confused with Prof. Durant. He said he was not at present connected with the university but had once been an instructor there.

"Are we to suppress the common decencies of life in America?" he asked. "We would be doing this if we suppressed free speech. Prof. Beard may disagree with me, but he has studied American history long enough to know that if there is anything worth while making a fight for, it is free speech. Nothing more inspiring has been written about the subject of free speech than what has been written by President Wilson."

Before the meeting was called to order there were two groups formed, one calling themselves the Royalists, the other the Rebels. Each group gave cheers and then the Royalists charged the Rebels. For about ten minutes there was a "free-for-all" in which a number of the students on both sides emerged with scratched faces and torn clothing. Order was finally restored. The circular calling the meeting said:

"As a protest against the suppression of academic freedom by the trustees of Columbia University, all students are requested to cut classes
